

The above figure represents a blockchain with three blocks. Each block has five properties. New blocks are added to end of the blockchain . The hash for the current block is generated by a hash function on the fly. Nonce is an integer that when set to certain values will make the hash of the block match a certain difficulty. In this case, difficulty is three zeros at the beginning of the hash.